A new hope for China's endangered animals

Thirty-two years after first publishing its List of Wild Animals Under State Priority Conservation, China has finally made an update, more than doubling the size of the list. Key additions include wolves and many endangered bird species.

China forges ahead with ambitious national park plan

The new system aims to benefit wildlife and people alike, but balancing conservation with the development of a tourism industry can be tricky.

Wild landscapes of the Tibetan Plateau dominate Sanjiangyuan National Park, which was completed in May. China plans to complete 10 new national parks—many of which unite locally managed protected areas—by the end of 2020.
